Despite Red-Hot Cross-Examination Does Not Mention Julia Bowne's Name.

CIPHER LETTERS KEPT OUT.

Julia Bowne have brought him to a prison cell, was in the County Court today a quarter of an hour before the Judge and ready to take the stand to further his defense of the abandoment of his wife and children. He was scru-pulously dressed and bore no traces of the convulsive emotions which racked his frame yesterday. , Julia Bowne did not leave her cell this morning. Cordova sent her word yesterday sufficient to bear up under the trial of to-day. In her cell she re-peatedly asked about Cordova and the messages had a direct effect upon her emotional bearing. Mrs. Cordova and her daughter Rhea were in court.

Prosecutor Berdine then took the witness from Philadelphia to Washington, New Mexico and Mexico.

"Did you have company?"

"I decline to answer."

"Who paid your fare."

Cipi er Letters Kept Out.

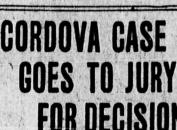

The cipher letters which Cordova in New York wrote to Julia Bowne in South River were produced. They are full of vicious endearments and, trying to keep the case as clean as possible, the Judge ruled against the compulsion of the translation by the witness, or an admission of his having written them. Cordova did not show a trace of nervousness during the cross-examination, although the prosecutor insinuated that he was a coward for dropping behind the protecting bulwark of "self incrimination," and intimated that he was a wife-beater.

"It ried to get away from the threats of you and Mrs. Cordova that you would arrest me."

The witness refused to tell whom he met at Tanners Corners, New Brunswick, on the old ground. Throughout the cross-examination he protected the woman whom everybody knew to have been his companion on the trans-continental trip.

The witness said that in August he had met his brother-in-law, Samuel Obre, and that he told him he was ready to support his wife and children, although he would have to leave them as Obre requested.

After a long wrangle between the attorneys the prosecutor began a line of inquiry which ran over the route of the second journey. Then matters of ecclesiastical incumbency resignation were told until Cordova was ready to start on his third trip.

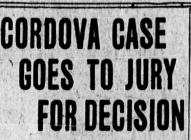

"When I saw it was impossible to do anything for Mrs. Cordova then I got ready to leave again."
